A Brief History of Afternoon Tea

In 1840, during Queen Victoria's reign, the Duchess of Bedford, Anna Russell, sought to overcome the "sinking feeling" between breakfast and dinner. At that time, people typically ate only two meals a day. Her solution was to have a small pot of tea and a light snack in the afternoon, taken privately in her boudoir. This soon became a habit, and she began inviting friends to join her for "tea and a walk in the fields."

The menu featured small cakes, bread and butter sandwiches, assorted sweets, and, of course, tea. This practice quickly caught on with fashionable society and eventually became popular with the middle and lower classes as well.

Nearly 200 years later, afternoon tea remains a quintessential part of British life.
