

A Tribute to Nature

Inspired by Cadogan Gardens

Our Inspiration

At Jumeirah Carlton Tower, the Afternoon Tea experience blossoms from the very soul of Cadogan Gardens, our verdant neighbour and muse.

These private gardens, rich with history and life, offer more than beauty alone, they provide a quiet sense of place and seasonal inspiration that gently shapes each moment of the experience.

Guided by a philosophy of sustainability and reverence for the land, we embrace the garden's natural rhythm, allowing its influence to inform an Afternoon Tea that is both refined and rooted. Every element is thoughtfully considered, reflecting a deep respect for time, provenance, and care.

At the helm of the culinary vision is Executive Chef Mario Perera, whose leadership ensures that craftsmanship, balance, and integrity remain at the heart of every creation. Working in close harmony with Executive Pastry Chef Martin Haidar, Chef Mario and his culinary team bring a historic approach to the experience, championing seasonality, sustainability, and understated elegance across both savoury and sweet courses.

Together, their collaboration elevates Afternoon Tea beyond British tradition invigorated by nature's gentle cadence.

Each moment at the table becomes a quiet homage to Cadogan Gardens, a celebration of craft, harmony, and the timeless cycle of the seasons.

Let nature unfold on your table.

Cadogan Place and its gardens: A brief history

Three hundred years ago, when the Cadogan Estate formally came into existence, Chelsea was a sparsely inhabited area largely devoted to agriculture and horticulture.

Cadogan Place was the first square to be developed by Henry Holland, together with Sloane Square. The garden is divided into two parts. The southern part was once known as the London Botanic Garden and was laid out at the end of the 18th century by William Salisbury, containing a library, hothouse, greenhouse, and conservatory.

It was then turned into a public promenade but retaining the glasshouse collections, which included the largest collection of orange trees in the vicinity of London. Today, the gardens still flourish and are enjoyed by residents, providing a green oasis in the heart of Sloane Street.

‘Gardens and churches are without doubt my most favourite parts of the Estate, and Chelsea today is known for its gardens; its beautiful residential squares, the Apothecaries’ Physic Garden and of course, The Royal Hospital is home to the world-famous Chelsea Flower Show. This legacy is no accident – the King’s Road limited development and industrialisation along its length from the late 17th century onwards. Chelsea, renowned for its clean air and waters in the 18th century, became the market garden of London. By the 19th century, many of its green spaces were prized and preserved. Today, gardens make up 15 acres of our 93-acre estate.’
